The latest on high-impact, high-quality coaching, leadership acceleration, and outplacement and internal mobility

A Message from our President and CEO

Greetings!

As many of us take time this season to reflect on what we're grateful for, remember that gratitude extends into our workplaces, too.

Sometimes the holidays or an anniversary remind us to pause. Taking time to appreciate your colleagues, clients, leaders, and teams can be a powerful driver for a leader's success and a team's success. If you have a moment – check out our LinkedIn post that talks about the benefits of showing gratitude in the workplace as a reminder to pause.

This month's newsletter touches on ideas and practices that will help you make an impact within your workplace, and perhaps, move you toward a mindset of gratitude. Hear from Mark Rossi as he discusses how courageous leadership and actions can turn into tangible outcomes; learn how to recognize your top talent and ways to elevate their performance; and discover how (and why) to assess your organization's readiness for change.

Assess Your Readiness for Organizational Change

By Brenda Wensil

You've identified a change you want to make in your organization. Whether it's to resolve an existing problem or capitalize on an opportunity, the first step in undertaking any change initiative is to assess your organization's readiness for change. In our latest blog post, Managing Director of Leadership Acceleration, Brenda Wensil, shares tips to help you take stock of your workplace culture and assess how your values, norms, and behaviors will either help or hinder your change efforts.
